1. Religion (pp. 320–324) Note: Try to figure out why waves of “evangelical” religion periodically sweep over the country. The evangelical “religious right” makes up a potent cultural and political force today.

a. What do the authors mean on p. 331 when they say that the Second Great Awakening was a “reaction against the growing liberalism in religion”? What ideas were they reacting against?

b. Revival religion stressed personal conversion (as opposed to predestination) and was particularly strong among Methodists and ____________. The evangelist most associated with the religious “Awakening” of the 1820s to the 1840s is Charles Grandison ____________, and the movement was especially strong in western New York along the route of the ____________ Canal in what came to be called the ____________ District. Evangelical religion tended to appeal to women more than men and women spearheaded moral reform movements including abolitionism. One of the largest new denominations was ____________, founded in upstate New York in 1830 by Joseph ____________. Eventually this group migrated to ____________ under the leadership of Brigham ____________  What do you find interesting about the Mormon Church?

2. Education and Reform (pp. 324–330)

a. This section covers the growth of tax-supported public education in the mid-1800s, particularly the work of reformers such as Horace ____________, Emma ____________, and Mary ____________ led efforts to increase educational opportunities for women. Reformers tackled many issues. The reformers included Dorothea ____________, who successfully fought to change criminal codes and treatment of the mentally ill.

b. The American ____________ Society, formed in Boston in 1826, was part of this reform spirit. (Note that alcohol intake was then something like three times what it is today and it’s still a big problem today!)  As you read the section about the fight against alcohol abuse, try to think of one similarity and one difference with the “war on drugs” of today.

b. In what areas do the authors say women were considered superior to men?

c. The three early feminist leaders mentioned here are Lucretia ________, Elizabeth Cady ____________, and Susan B. ____________. Two of these women were ____________, one of the earliest religious denominations to stress full equality. The Woman’s Rights Convention, commonly considered to mark the beginning of the modern feminist movement, was held in ____________, New York in 18____. The Declaration of ____________, issued at the end of this convention, was modeled on the American Declaration of ________________, but it declared that “All men and ________ are created equal.” Many women at this convention and later argued against including a demand for the right to vote.  If you had been a relatively conservative woman, what argument might you have used against demanding the ballot?

d. Perhaps as a forerunner of the hippies of the 1960s (or of certain “cults” today), a variety of noble but largely unsuccessful “communalistic” utopian societies sprang up in this individualistic and anti-authoritarian age including New ____________ in Indiana, _________ Farm in Massachusetts, and the ____________ Community in New York.

4. Science and Art (pp. 333–339)

   a.  What impressed you most when reading about the state of health and medicine in the mid-nineteenth century?

   b. The section on art is not overly complimentary about American contributions but does mention Thomas ____________ in the field of architecture and the _________ _________ school of landscape painters influenced by the upsurge of nationalism after the War of 1812.

5. Blossoming of a National Literature (pp. 339–345)

   a. What was distinctive about “Knickerbocker Group” writers such as Washington ____________, James Fenimore ____________, and William Cullen ____________?

   b. How do you summarize the “transcendentalist” philosophy of Ralph Waldo ____________ and how did Henry David ____________ implement that philosophy with his Waldon Pond experiences?

      (1) Definition:

      (2) Implementation:

   c. Note a distinguishing feature of the works of three of the writers mentioned in the remainder of the chapter that you found most interesting.  Have you read anything by any of these writers?

VARYING VIEWPOINTS
Reform Movements/Abolitionism

1. This essay is interesting because it points out how the historical interpretation of various social reform movements has been related to the current level of reform activity. Read the fourth paragraph on pp. 346-347 about the “historiography” of abolitionism. How were the abolitionists generally viewed in the early twentieth century when African-Americans were institutionalized second-class citizens and there was little effort at reform? How has this view changed since the civil rights movement of the 1960s?

   Early twentieth century:

   Later twentieth century:

2. Most of us have grown up with a positive view of abolitionists and crusaders for minority rights. But in such movements, there are always those who argue for smaller, incremental steps and compromise rather than pushing for a “pure” position - a demand for radical change that risks entrenchment of the opposition and possible conflict. From this perspective, how might some historians have “blamed the fanaticism of the abolitionists for the Civil War”?
